- Identify potential concerns or single points of failure left behind by rapid change.
- Implement a solid and structured change process.
- Assess changes and use analytics to report on successes.
- Review change, except where there are issues and place amendments where required.

- Communicate change with your workforce to gain buy-in and negotiate with requirements where needed.
- Align team targets with new company goals.
- Evaluate the needs of your workforce and assess FTE requirements based on homeworking models.

Audience

This course is suitable for anyone managing or planning change within the workplace as a reaction to Coronavirus. It would be particularly suitable for:

- Directors.
- Business Owners.
- Operations Managers.
- Planning Managers.
- Data Analysts.
- Supervisors.
- Team Leaders.
- Aspiring Managers.

Training Methodology

This course supports a range of adult learning styles using project planning group sessions, discussion groups, and trainer-led seminars. Using real-life case studies, you can compare experiences with like-minded people and assess a way forward.

The course will give you access to tools and recommended strategies for implementing procedures to seamlessly transition your business into a more modern working model.

Summary

The COVID-19 pandemic has had a massive effect on businesses globally. Many businesses have had to make drastic changes in their operations to remain profitable, while others have switched to a fully working-from-home model to support their opening hours while staff are isolating.

Many of the changes have positively impacted processes and profits, and we've learned a wealth of lessons after reacting to government guidelines. The questions now are how these changes can be integrated into a fundamental business plan and how the changes will affect the employees who are the backbone of the business.

In the rapidly changing economic climate, it's essential that organisations look to the future and predict coming changes to ensure income security. They will also need to consider provisions for people remaining in a homeworking environment or the safety of returning to the office. Some employees may require flexibility as their work-life balance could be affected by changes in employment procedures, and this could leave employers in a difficult position if staff don't buy into the change.
