Audience

This course is designed for anyone within an organisation tasked with negotiating budgets and project plans for future development. It would be most beneficial for:

- Business Owners
- Departmental Leads
- Account Managers
- Financial Managers
- Project Planners
- Supply Chain Managers
- Operations Managers
- Bid Writers
- Executives
- Directors

Training Methodology

This course uses various adult learning techniques to aid full understanding and comprehension. Participants will review real-life negotiation meetings and assess the research and background information that helped to overcome differences and barriers. They will work in groups to discuss their business and the types of negotiations required and gain insight into areas that may cause disputes. They will then conduct role-playing activities and scenarios using the practices and negotiation tools provided to come to a mutually beneficial resolution, utilising their learned communication tactics to avoid disputes.

Summary

Negotiations are essential for growth and progression both inside and outside your business. Your relationships with your employees, suppliers, partners, and stakeholders will determine your future project plans and may help shape your business. Understanding the basics of negotiation is important to creating a mutually beneficial relationship with all parties. Sometimes, this requires you to compromise to achieve your long-term goals. Occasionally, you and suppliers, or stakeholders may not agree with your company's direction, leading to awkwardness and arguments if not managed carefully. Understanding each party's motivations and determining a compromise that works for everyone is essential. Resolving disputes calmly and productively will improve your relationships with external parties and give you a good reputation when agreeing on other contracts in the future. The ability to negotiate effectively and resolve disputes to benefit all parties will require careful consideration of each person's needs and motivations for development. Effective communication skills, body language, and the ability to paint a picture of your intentions will help both parties, including stakeholders, understand each other and achieve a positive resolution.
