Training Methodology

This course is designed to accommodate various learning styles through face-to-face teaching in a classroom environment, ensuring participants can expand their knowledge and increase their skill set. The course features PowerPoint presentations, article reviews, other relevant materials, and group and individual exercises and discussions. There may also be some independent work set requiring the submission of articles to demonstrate understanding, as well as an end-of-course test. Note-taking is encouraged, and electronic devices are welcome for this purpose.

The course manual will be integral to the learning experience, providing references for future use. Participants are encouraged to ask questions and can spend one-on-one time with the tutor to address any issues. Additionally, the classroom environment offers the opportunity to network with peers in similar roles, enhancing the overall learning experience.

Summary

This course teaches you to efficiently and effectively administer or manage a contract process. Contracts can be fraught with pitfalls and difficulties and have far-reaching legal implications. Therefore, it's crucial to fully understand the legalities to ensure successful partnerships with vendors, service providers, and contracts in business life.

You will investigate the contract process, from creation to the most common clauses, and explain alternative structures and strategies. Finally, you'll explore the methods and skills needed to successfully negotiate a contract, including handling any variations and claims that may arise. This course is required for anyone involved in contracting as part of their daily role, providing the foundation to deal with the hazards and pitfalls of creating and working with contracts.
