Participants will listen to trainer-led presentations to understand exactly what it takes to become a successful PA. They will also work through a variety of systems and platforms aimed at increasing productivity and efficiency with planned projects.

Participants will also work through modules to understand the importance of accurate record keeping, GDPR necessities and also conduct practical activities to improve note taking abilities.

Summary

Being a personal assistant requires a diverse skill set and a high level of adaptability. First and foremost, effective communication skills are essential, as personal assistants often act as the primary point of contact between their employer and the rest of the world.

Organisational abilities are crucial, as you will be responsible for managing schedules, appointments, and various tasks. You will also need to be proficient in time management to prioritise and coordinate multiple activities efficiently. Technical proficiency is increasingly important too, as personal assistants are often tasked with handling digital communication and using productivity tools.

As a personal assistant or secretary, you will serve as a gatekeeper, managing the flow of information and ensuring the employer's time is utilised optimally. By handling routine tasks, you will allow executives and professionals to focus on high-priority matters, contributing to better decision-making and overall efficiency.
