Objective

During this course, you'll learn:

- To be familiar with the strategic links between strategic change and your operation.
- To be able to plan a strategic roadmap of future plans for your business.
- To consider a cost-benefit analysis when making changes.
- To evaluate project plans based on data insights to discover new and innovative ways to move forward.
- To understand that the culture of your employees directly affects the success of strategic planning.
- To discover models of strategic theory and put them into practice.
- To predict strategic plans laid down by competitor organisations and understand how to combat these to stay ahead.
- To develop a clear vision for your business and interlink this with employee goals and performance.

Audience

This training would benefit anyone that is involved in change management or future planning for an organisation. It would be specifically helpful for:

- Planning Managers.
- Change Managers.
- Heads of Department.
- Senior Managers.
- Team Managers.
- HR Personnel.
- Directors.

Training Methodology

This course uses a combination of trainer-led lectures and discussion groups to help trainees understand their roles within their organisations and how they can affect the wider business strategy.

Trainees will be provided with interactive case-study work and take part in practical role-playing activities to create a long-term strategic business plan which has a transferable roadmap applicable to their specific organisation.

Summary

Your ability to harness success for your business' future is determined by your research, plans for change, and most importantly, your strategic thinking. Effective strategic decision-making based on trending data, competitor changes, and customer or client feedback will enable you to keep your company moving forward and stay ahead of the game.

As a manager or leader within an organisation, it's your responsibility to share strategic goals, develop a vision that your employees can buy into, and set achievable SMART targets to create development opportunities and increase profits and conversion.

Combining the psychology of employees with accurate measurement tools will provide a multi-faceted approach to strategically plan your company's roadmap, add value and work towards managing solutions to improve processes, business models, and forward-thinking employee culture.
